HEIDI ROSNER

After a career as a mechanical engineer, Rosner found art “later in life.” It was her desire to meet creative people that led her to art, not any aspirations to be an artist. Nine years later, Rosner couldn’t be happier. She found she had a knack for still life and landscape painting. She paints on location as much as possible.

“I found painting by accident,” Rosner says. “I stumbled into the Scottsdale Artists School, carrying my grade school variety paints and brushes. I had signed up for a watercolor class that advertised ‘Beginners welcome.’ I had no idea what I’d gotten myself into ... Because I am passionate about what I do, it seems like every day is a gift and I wake up looking forward to what it has to offer.”
